(Sociology)
Student Association President

“My upbringing from the Bronx caused me to be passionate about social issues.”

Report on Generosity
The SUNY New Paltz Foundation

Kaina Rivera, a senior majoring in sociology, was last year’s recipient of the Professor Ken Skelton Scholarship for Progressive Social Change. “Many social justice concerns affect my community and the people I love. I want to be able to provide solutions for situations that I have experienced and be able to help the generations to come.”

The scholarship, established to support sociology majors engaged in social change efforts, was the brainchild of Richard Adler ’77 (Sociology) and Donna Adler ’77 (Sociology) two New Paltz sociology majors who were inspired to dedicate themselves to progressive social change by their professor Ken Skelton. Richard Adler is a successful attorney who has been at the center of national efforts to protect players, including student athletes, against sports injuries. Rivera is only the second recipient of this scholarship, awarded annually to students demonstrating academic excellence and a commitment to social change. After New Paltz, Rivera is currently considering Ph.D. programs in sociology with a focus in law. “I am a believer that everything starts with education,” she said, “and if I can become involved in a field that allows me to be involved with the youth and law, then I’ll be taking all opportunities.”
Ken Pasternak
STAYS IN THE GAME
Ken Pasternak ’77 (Secondary Education: Social Studies) is the namesake of the Kenneth D. Pasternak Trading Room at the School of Business, but he also gives back to his alma mater by inviting students to visit the offices of his private equity real estate firm. Sometimes, he hires them.

None of the equations in the questions he was about to ask would be any harder than the math that a fifth-grader could handle, Ken Pasternak promised with a smile. But that didn’t seem to reassure the group of SUNY New Paltz School of Business students seated around the table in Pasternak’s boardroom. If anything, it may have made the questions he was asking even more intimidating. What’s the largest asset class in the United States? Pasternak asked. What does the term LTV mean? What’s a REIT? What’s an incentive fee? What are the top five requirements for someone entering the real estate business? The last question was the easiest to answer: money, money, money, money, and money.

Born and raised in Fleischmanns, N.Y., in the central Catskills, Ken Pasternak got an early taste of entrepreneurial success selling used cars to his fellow New Paltz students in the 1970s.

“I’d be sitting there watching the pricing action at car auctions, which made no sense,” he said. “But meanwhile, I’m taking Paul Samuelson’s Introduction to Economics where I learned about the laws of supply and demand.” He ended up writing a paper related to his use of technology to predict prices at car auctions. The paper led another professor to tell Pasternak, “You’re wasting your time with these thirty-five-hundred pound things and you would get a lot more bang for your buck if you tried trading these things called stock certificates.”

Which Pasternak did—in a big way, using skills and approaches he’d learned as an education major at New Paltz. After quickly establishing himself as one of the firm’s best traders, he ended up the head of trading at Spear, Leeds & Kellogg (later acquired by Goldman Sachs), where he revolutionized hiring and training. First, he gave the firm’s traders a series of aptitude tests. Then he correlated the results of the tests to how successful the traders had been in the stock market. This led to a highly successful predictive test for hiring new employees, and a curriculum and lesson plans for training new traders in all the necessary skills they needed.

"...the challenges of creating an organization—mentoring young people into outstanding performers in the game of life—to me, that's really fulfilling." —Ken Pasternak ’77 to succeed.

Pasternak’s innovative approaches to equities trading paid off. When he took Knight Trading Group public in 1998 (he’d cofounded the firm in 1994, after leaving Spear, Leeds), its market capitalization exceeded $5 billion. After ranking as one of Wall Street’s most highly compensated executives of 2001, Pasternak retired from the stock market altogether in 2002.

Pasternak started his new company, the KABR Group, in 2008, after the beginning of the recession and a realization that there were enormous opportunities in undervalued real estate. Although his new company has been successful financially, he still considers that to be “a secondary benefit.” “The primary benefit,” he said, “and why I still work, is that the challenges of creating an organization—mentoring young people into outstanding performers in the game of life—to me, that’s really fulfilling.”

Sometimes it seems like he’s “running an MBA program” at the KABR Group, he added, “even though we call it a job.”

When he was younger, Pasternak said, he wanted to be the general manager and coach of the Knicks. “I always thought about chemistry,” he said—“how you put together sports teams, complementary skills.” Building a business, he believes, is similar to coaching a team. It’s about nurturing “the intellectual property we call employees,” he said. “It’s about leadership, and challenging yourself in a leadership role. The main benefit is watching people grow.” This is why Pasternak is still in business, and why he delights in hosting groups of SUNY New Paltz students eager to learn more about the secrets of real estate success.

Pasternak’s enthusiasm for mentorship has even led to the hiring of a fellow New Paltz alumnus. Richard Guido ’15 (Business), who was president of the New Paltz baseball team, member of the Chi Alpha Sigma honors society, as well as winner of the School of Business Student Leader of the Year award, among other laurels, visited the KABR Group offices on a School of Business student visit his senior year. “We hit it off,” Guido said. “We emailed back and forth, and then he offered me a job.” Guido is now in his third year at KABR, and helping to host the latest group of visiting SUNY New Paltz School of Business students.

Creating a successful team, helping young people become “credits to our economic system, and our community, and our society,” and then “winning the World Series of life”—that’s the most engaging and fulfilling thing a person can do, Pasternak believes.

“How does Paul McCartney play?” he asked with a grin. “I don’t know why he plays—but he doesn’t play for money.”

“It’s about leadership, and challenging yourself in a leadership role. The main benefit is watching people grow.”

The SUNY New Paltz FOUNDATION
July 1, 2016—June 30, 2017

Endowment and total assets as of June 20, 2017: $35 Million
Through its collections, exhibitions, and public programs, the Samuel Dorsky Museum of Art at SUNY New Paltz supports and enriches the academic programs at the College, presents a broad range of world art for study and enjoyment, and serves as a center for Hudson Valley arts and culture.

The museum is gaining wide recognition as the premier public showplace for exhibition, education, and cultural scholarship about the Hudson Valley region’s art and artists from yesterday and today, recently landing a spot on the Huffington Post’s “Best College Art and History Museums in the Northeast” list. With more than 9,000 square feet of exhibition space distributed over six galleries, The Dorsky is one of the largest museums within the SUNY system. Officially dedicated on Oct. 20, 2001, the Dorsky has presented over 100 exhibitions, including commissions, collection-based projects, and in-depth studies of contemporary artists, including Jervis McEntee, Robert Morris, Alice Neel, Judy Pfaff, Carolee Schneemann, Ushio Shinohara, historic Woodstock artists Eugene Speicher and Charles Rosen, and Hudson Valley luminaries Russel Wright and Dick Polich.

THE DORSKY FAMILY
The Dorsky museum’s dedication brought to fruition a project that had dominated the last decade of philanthropist Samuel Dorsky’s life. Dorsky’s lead gift to the SUNY New Paltz Foundation provided the impetus for the construction of the new museum building as well as the complete renovation of the former College Art Gallery to become part of the museum.

The Dorsky family continues to be a major supporter of The Dorsky Museum and SUNY New Paltz. David, Karen, and Noah Dorsky serve on the Advisory Board of The Dorsky Museum. Karen and Noah also serve as directors of the SUNY New Paltz Foundation.
ART UNCORKED
The Dorsky hosted “Art Uncorked,” its annual fundraising event, which benefits museum exhibitions, publications and public programs, in October 2017 at The Century Association. Joan K. Davidson, the noted philanthropist and civic leader, was recognized at the event, for her significant contributions to the Hudson Valley.

From 1977 to 1993, Davidson was president of the J. M. Kaplan Fund, a New York philanthropic foundation established by her father in 1945 and well known for its innovative support of the environment, preservation, the arts, and civil liberties. In 1995, as president emeritus of the Fund, she founded its Furthermore Grants in Publishing Program, which she continues to lead today.

Save The Date!
The next Art Uncorked will be on October 17, 2018

SCIENCE AND ART
The Dorsky has showcased new ways of thinking about the relationship between art and other specialties that benefit students of all majors.

For example, Associate Professor of Geological Sciences Alvin Konigsberg introduced his lab students to the relationship between science and art at the Jervis McEntee exhibition in 2015 where they modeled cloud identification methods.

“Science classes don’t often find ways to incorporate art, but I think doing so opens up the possibility of some really unique lessons and lab experiences,” Konigsberg said.

WHY Philanthropy?

The SUNY New Paltz Foundation, founded in 1976, has been a critical part of the College’s success for over 40 years. Yet we’re often asked: Why does a state school need philanthropic support? Why should a public university seek charitable donations?

These are good questions—ones that take on a new dimension with the Excelsior Scholarship providing free tuition for some. To answer them, it’s useful to provide context and background.

SUNY New Paltz’s operating budget is funded through a combination of state support (down to 23%) and tuition (77%). This budget includes most salaries, modest scholarship recruitment funding, and underwriting of student-centered programs (such as the Sojourner Truth Library, Center for Student Success, and Scholars Mentorship Program).

Major construction and renovation initiatives are funded by state-issued bonds via a separate budget; dormitory construction and renovations are also funded by bonded monies, which are repaid by the students who live on campus, via their housing fees. These three funding sources are not interchangeable—tuition can’t be used to build dorms, in other words, and bonds can’t be used to fund the operating budget.

All of that constitutes the basics of a successful university operation. After that, the SUNY New Paltz Foundation steps in.

What do you remember from college? Friends, favorite professors, challenging but rewarding classes, the freedom of being away from home, perhaps for the first time. But maybe you also remember incredible learning experiences outside the classroom: at an internship, in a research lab, at a free lecture given by a visiting scholar, in a show at the Dorsky Museum, during a semester spent studying abroad, or even in the planetarium on Astronomy Night. Maybe an emergency fund helped you complete that final stretch to graduation.

The SUNY New Paltz Foundation enhances the College experience in all these invaluable ways and more. Philanthropic support from corporations, foundations, and countless individuals creates career-launching opportunities that classes alone cannot achieve. For students facing expenses that far exceed the tuition costs covered by federal and state grants, philanthropy helps close the gap. Philanthropy fosters innovation and creativity across the campus, where virtually every department benefits from Foundation support.

The Foundation supports the life-altering experiences that our alumni may remember more than anything else from their time here, long after they’ve left New Paltz. Generous donations from you make all this possible.

Why give to a state school? Because a public university is committed in every aspect of its being to a public cause. We are committed to supporting first-generation college students, economically disadvantaged students, military-affiliated students, and just students striving to find themselves.

State support of a public university is only the beginning. You, our alumni, faculty, friends, and neighbors, do the rest.

Thank you.
