The door to a college education does not automatically open for everyone. In fact, many students cannot gain admittance because the standard way of measuring potential does not take into consideration their preparation, commitment and desire to attend college. The Educational Opportunity Program (EOP) at the State University of New York (SUNY) addresses this issue by providing qualifying students with the necessary keys to succeed in college.

Since 1967, EOP has offered New York state residents who have been unable to meet general admissions criteria, because of inadequate financial resources and academic preparation, with an opportunity to realize their academic potential. The program provides students with financial and academic assistance, and equips them with a strong support system.

Antonio Bonilla ’87, ’05g (Hum. Ed.), interim director of the Educational Opportunity Program at New Paltz, believes the importance of a college education is even greater for academically and financially disadvantaged students. He said when the entrance to college is no longer obstructed by a lack of resources, EOP students can focus their attention on doing well.

“Once students have bitten into the idea that a college education is attainable, success breeds success,” said Bonilla.

All EOP students come from low-income families. In order to be financially eligible, an applicant’s family income must meet specific guidelines. For example, a family of two must have an annual salary or wage income below $24,400 in order to qualify.

EOP students must also demonstrate the academic potential to succeed in college. A first-year EOP applicant may be considered academically eligible if they meet any one of the following criteria: have between a 75 and 85 high school average; have a combined verbal and mathematic SAT score below 1050; or attended a non-college preparatory, general or vocational high school.
Bonilla said students who qualify for EOP often do not know what to expect when they arrive on campus, because they have no previous exposure to college. At New Paltz, 85 percent of the more than 500 EOP students attended inner-city high schools without college preparatory courses.

Jessica Vargas '02 (Intl. Bus.), was raised in a single-parent family and had an 85 average in high school, but her mother could not afford to send her to college. She said EOP provided her with all the resources she needed for a successful four years at New Paltz.

“A student like me would not have gotten the opportunity to show what they were capable of without it,” said Vargas, who today is a senior marketing manager with Reader’s Digest in New York City.

The EOP program not only provides financial resources, but also additional services to support the success, retention and graduation of its students. For example, all first-year EOP students at New Paltz participate in a yearlong orientation that includes a seminar class, counseling and tutoring.

Robert Hancock III, an EOP advisor at New Paltz, said EOP students belong to a close-knit community of peer mentors and advisors dedicated to student success. In addition to assisting students academically, advisors, who are full-time college employees, serve as advocates for them in areas such as financial aid, records and registration and career development. Many students in the program are the first members of their families to attend college, and Hancock said they can benefit from the attention from someone who knows the college campus.

He said advisors are also available to assist with personal issues – such as dealing with a death in the family – that may hinder a student’s educational pursuits.

“Not everyone comes in with the same story,” he said. “We maintain one-on-one contact with our students to make sure they stay connected with the college.”

Olive Rose ’01 (Psych.), a public relations associate for the New York Bridge Authority, said, “I was able to walk into the EOP office and see my advisor about anything at practically anytime.”

During a difficult time at college, when Rose needed to take a semester off, she said her advisor kept in touch to make sure she

Forty Years and Going Strong

The State University of New York’s Education Opportunity Program, the second oldest program of its kind in the country, marked 40 years last year.

An anniversary party was held on November 2, 2007 in Albany. EOP alumni from across the statewide system were honored, including four New Paltz graduates, who each received the Distinguished EOP Alumni Award.

The New Paltz recipients were Robert Jackson ’75 (Pol. Sci.) a New York City Council Representative; Tomas D. Morales ’75 (Sec. Ed.), President of the College of Staten Island; Edward Paulion ’91 (Hist.) a professor at John Jay College of Criminal Justice; and Jocelyn Santana ’87 (Eng.), author, scholar, and the Director of Program for English Language Learners in District 79 in New York City.
In their first year at college, EOP students are also paired with a sophomore, junior or senior student, known as a peer mentor, who can provide an inside look at college life. Calvin Luo ’06 (Acct.), ’08g (Bus. Admin.) said when he arrived at New Paltz he met with his peer mentor on a weekly basis to make sure he stayed on track.

“Thanks to the mentor program, we developed a long-term friendship, and we are still keeping in touch,” said Luo. “He called me and told me that he was getting married recently.”

Bonilla said it is this close attention that has consistently earned New Paltz’s EOP the highest retention and graduation rates in the SUNY system. This distinction received national recognition in 2004 with the Noel-Levitz Retention Excellence Award and the program often serves as a model for other schools looking to improve their EOP success rates.

Current EOP student Mamadou Diack ’10 (Fin., Asian Stud.) said that having an advisor who is passionate about his success has given him the opportunity to make the most of his time at New Paltz. In his first two years in college, Diack has worked toward a business degree, served as a peer mentor, worked in the EOP office, and applied to be a resident assistant.

“Kids who come in with EOP have a better chance of success, because you are not left by yourself,” Diack said.

 returned to New Paltz. “He never saw leaving school as an option, even when I felt I couldn’t carry on,” she said.

Solomon Kuffour ’10 (Undeclared) spoke with Desmond Murray ’82 (Comm.) at the first-ever EOP Alumni-Student Networking Session in New York City in January 2008.

Profile of an Alum: Herb Trimpe '99g

by Kurt Anthony Krug
Images courtesy Herb Trimpe '99g

When artist Herb Trimpe '99g (Human. Ed.) broke into comics in 1966, he was rejected by DC Comics but hired by Marvel Comics that same day, remaining there for 30 years.

“I had just gotten out of the Air Force and was looking for work. I went to DC first and they weren’t that interested. That afternoon, I went to Marvel and got work right away. It’s pretty amazing when you think about it,” recalled Trimpe, 69, of Rhinebeck, N.Y., who earned his master’s degree in humanistic education from New Paltz.

Trimpe joined Marvel full-time, doing art corrections and operating the Photostat machine. He also inked on a freelance basis. The first book he penciled was Marvel’s “Two-Gun Kid.”

From there, Trimpe drew “The Incredible Hulk,” one of Marvel’s flagship characters and pop culture icon. The brainchild of Stan Lee and Jack Kirby, the Hulk debuted in 1962, when Dr. Bruce Banner was transformed into a green-skinned monster after over exposure to gamma radiation.

Described as “Jekyll and Hyde for the Atomic Age,” Banner became the Hulk when enraged or stressed. The military hunted the Hulk relentlessly. The character is so popular that he has been adapted for television and film. The most well-known incarnation is “The Incredible Hulk” TV series which ran from 1977-82, starring Bill Bixby as Banner and Lou Ferrigno as the Hulk.

“I see the Hulk as a non-violent individual. He becomes violent only when he perceives a threat,” said Trimpe. “The Hulk just wants to get along with everyone and be accepted for what he is. He was always kind to children. He has a big heart.”

In an era of movies based on comic book characters, the Hulk returns this year in “The Incredible Hulk.” This time, Edward Norton plays Banner, Liv Tyler plays Betty, and William Hurt plays Thunderbolt.

Little did Trimpe know that he would be drawing the Hulk for eight years, working with several writers. “Stan stuck his head in my office one day and asked if I’d like to do the Hulk. I thought, ‘Okay, great.’ I didn’t see it as a big deal. It was regular freelance work to do while I was on staff,” said Trimpe. “In those days, people just stayed on the book as long as it sold.”

According to Trimpe, the Hulk wasn’t always popular. His original series lasted six issues, but there was enough interest in the character to chronicle his adventures in “Tales to Astonish.” When Trimpe assumed the art chores in 1967, the character returned to an eponymous title.

“Wolverine was a throwaway character, no more, no less. He didn’t become The Wolverine we all know until he joined the X-Men,” said Trimpe. “By that time, he was a different character. His true birth was with the “X-Men” book.”

“(“G.I. Joe”) was offered to me because editorial thought I’d draw the hardware accurately. I had a lot of toys as references and a binder with models of the characters that was three inches thick,” said Trimpe.

In the late 1980s, Marvel was bought by New World Entertainment. It eventually went public in 1991 and bankrupt in 1996, ending Trimpe’s career there. “It went from a mom-and-pop publisher to a corporation. That was the beginning of the end. One of the things that made Marvel was trying different things, creating new characters and bringing in artists who put an extreme twist on the ball.”

Trimpe had been giving workshops at various schools and substitute teaching, paving the way for his next vocation. He became an art teacher in Eldred Central School in upstate New York.

“I really liked being in the classroom,” he said.

Trimpe taught for two years before retiring. He has since been doing commissions and sporadic projects for Marvel, Image Comics and Dark Horse Comics. He also penned a novel, which his agent is trying to sell.

When looking back on his career as an artist, Trimpe said the best thing was managing his own time.

“You got to work when necessary, which was fine as long as you got the job done,” said Trimpe. “I was also home with my kids when they grew up. Some dads don’t get the opportunity to do that. That was a fun thing to do.”

New Paltz Athletics Spurs Lasting Sense of Friendship

By Lee Conell '09 (Engl.)

Athletics at New Paltz isn’t just about exercise and adrenaline rushes. It’s also about a long history of mentorship, teamwork and friendship.

In 2008, basketball and baseball celebrate approximately 60 years of uninterrupted post-World War II play at New Paltz since World War II, when all men’s sports were disbanded. Soccer celebrates its 50th anniversary in the fall of 2008 and in the fall of 2007, the cross country team marked its own 50th year. Although each of these teams had its share of great stars and big wins during its first years, what stays with many of the players is a sense of camaraderie.

While today’s teams practice in the Athletics and Wellness Center, Frank Manzi ’52 (Ed.) began basketball practice in 1948 in the Old Main Gym where there was hardly room for spectators. Manzi remembers players running down the court at top speeds, missing the basket and hurtling through the entry doors located under the basket.

The court space may have been small, but basketball earned a big place in Manzi’s New Paltz experience. As one of the tallest students on campus, Manzi’s height got him noticed by Coach Loren Campbell, who encouraged him to try out for the team and worked with him on his game.

“He was very patient,” said Manzi, who eventually became team captain. Manzi said playing on a team, rather than his individual triumphs, is what he remembers most. “You’re almost like one unit,” he said.

Like Manzi, basketball and baseball player Anthony Gamboli ’60 (Behavior Sci.) felt his team acted as one, thanks to the efforts of Coach Campbell.

“Back then we had a lot of vets on the teams,” Gamboli said, referring to the Korean War veterans who came to New Paltz on the Government Issue (GI) bill. “We had loads of guys that were 22, 23 years old coming into the mix – a diversity of young men. But Loren Campbell treated everyone like family.”

Gamboli, who became a teacher and a basketball and golf coach, said Campbell was an institution.

Campbell’s presence at the college was felt by other students as well. Reed Jarvis ’58 (Art Ed.) had seen Campbell around campus, and had always admired him. However, when he invited...
Women’s Athletics

The history of female sports teams at New Paltz reflects the obstacles that women athletes across the nation have faced, and fought against. According to current athletic director Stuart Robinson, in the early history of the college, women had little opportunity to play competitively. While women created their own athletic association (WAA) in the 1920s, they were mostly limited to field days and intramural activities.

Carol Eckman, an associate professor of physical education at the college, challenged this limitation in 1963, when she received permission from administrator and coach Loren Campbell to begin a competitive basketball team for women. Eckman’s efforts are still recognized today with the Carol Eckman award, which honors female athletes at New Paltz who act as role models to current and future female athletes.

Slowly but surely women’s athletics were given the chance to grow, thanks in part to efforts like Eckman’s, as well as the development of the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW) and Title IX (1972), which prohibited discrimination on the basis of gender in school activities. Still, it was only in the 1985-86 academic year that proper records of games were kept and athletics for women at New Paltz began to resemble what they are today.

“Now, women’s teams at New Paltz are flourishing,” says Robinson. With the return of women’s lacrosse, nine of New Paltz’s 15 intercollegiate sports are open to women.

Meri Weiss ’06g (Engl.) had her debut novel, “Closer to Fine” (Kensington Books, 2008), published this summer.

Chris Forman ’02 (Hist.) is the author of two published books and with another one due out this year. He was also named best local author by the Times Herald-Record in the annual reader’s poll and his book, “Dead Men Don’t Jog” (Infinity Publishing, 2006), was named best book.

Jason Gehlert ’98 (Comm.) his newest novel, “Contagion,” available through Stonegarden.net Publishers (www.stonegarden.net). This is Gehlert’s fourth release and centers on a virus outbreak in a small African colony where a team of doctors and the U.S. military must race against the clock to save the colonists and themselves. Horror Fiction Weekly calls the publication “ambitious, fast-paced, and reads like a cult movie.”

Josephine Nobisso ’74 is the author of 43 beloved books for children and pseudonymous novels for adults. She conducts 100 author programs each year and has earned many significant honors, among them the Friend of Education Award. Her book, “Show Don’t Tell: Secrets of Writing” (Gingerbread House, 2004) was given the Global Learning Initiative Award.

Robert Sommer ’78g (Engl.) had his debut novel, “Where the Wind Blew” (The Wessex Collective, 2008), published this spring.
Anne Spollen ’80, ’91g (Engl.) didn’t know the important role that New Paltz would play in her life when, in the seventh grade, she made weekend trips to the Hudson Valley to visit her older brother, Thomas Spollen ’76 (Engl.), at the campus. But even then she recognized that New Paltz was unique.

“I remember thinking New Paltz was incredibly beautiful,” she said. “And everybody who I met through my brother seemed really happy with school.”

Those trips encouraged Spollen to choose New Paltz for college, not knowing the formative role it would play in her artistic development. As an English major, Spollen was impressed by the way her professors would frequently read from their own published works when they wanted to illustrate a point in literature.

“That was sort of amazing to us as students,” Spollen said, “how casually they would pull one of their books from their briefcases and read from their fiction or poetry as if it were a commonplace, expected event.”

As a result, Spollen was motivated to take herself seriously as a writer, a move that paid off. Her first young adult novel, “Shape of Water,” released this April (Flux, 2008), was nominated for the National Book Award in Young People’s Literature.

Spollen not only found artistic inspiration at New Paltz, she also found love.

She remembers meeting Philip Pileggi ’77 (Econ.), a New Paltz graduate who lived in an off-campus apartment across from her, two weeks before she graduated. At first, Spollen refused to date Pileggi because he seemed too old for her. “He had a car and a job,” she said. “I just had a bicycle.”

But Pileggi won her over. After Spollen graduated, they kept in touch through letters and phone calls for two years until Spollen returned to New Paltz full time in 1982 to earn credits to become a certified English teacher. They married in 1989. As they searched for a place to settle down, they found they couldn’t stop thinking about their college town. “Every place we went, we’d say ‘It isn’t as nice as New Paltz.’ We finally looked at each other and said, ‘New Paltz is like home,’” Spollen said. She went on to teach freshman composition at the college between 1987 and 1990 while she was a graduate student.

She currently lives in New Jersey with her husband and three children, and is working on a second young adult novel set in New Paltz.

Student Highlights

When Michelle Reiner ’08 (Acct.) tells people she plans on being an accountant, she’s usually met with skepticism. “I often hear comments like, “Why? It’s so boring,” or “Do you really want to sit behind a desk crunching numbers for the rest of your life?”” says Reiner. Her internship at Bailey Browne CPA & Associates in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., however, has been anything but dull.

“After just a few days of working there, I saw the environment was fast-paced and interesting,” Reiner said.

Because Bailey Browne offers a wide range of services, such as auditing and assurance, tax consulting and financial planning, Reiner received experience in many different areas of the accounting field. While her internship provided practical, hands-on experience, it also helped her to appreciate her college courses at New Paltz. Thanks to these classes, Reiner felt well-prepared for her internship.

Reiner graduated in May and in the fall will begin graduate school to get her master’s degree in business administration.

—Lee Conell ’09 (Engl.)

Lee Conell ’09 (English), an intern in the Public Affairs Office, had an essay published in The New York Times Modern Love column on June 1. As a finalist in the Modern Love College Essay Contest, Conell’s non-fiction piece—about her boyfriend’s experiences with living in the great outdoors—appeared in both the print and online versions of the paper. The online version can be accessed at www.nytimes.com/2008/06/01/fashion/01love.html.
