Faculty! You raised a Starfish Flag – Now What?

You noticed a student is struggling in your course, so you take action and Raise a Starfish Flag. What happens next?

Below is a look into what happens once you Raise a Starfish Flag:

Raising a flag is an important tool you can use to help your students stay on track throughout the semester. Starfish flags open the door to real-time feedback for students. When a student received that feedback from the flag, they are not only prompted to take action, but they also recognize that their faculty care about their success.

Faculty can submit their feedback through Starfish flags at ANY point in the semester. As soon as you notice a student is struggling, you log into Starfish and raise that concern with just a few clicks of your mouse. This is timely feedback that ensures we can make a difference in our student's college experience.
