Tom Savidge
Class of 2014

I interned at the Village Hall of the Incorporated Village of Massapequa Park (my hometown). I got the position by cold calling the village asking if they needed any interns. I organized road plans, maps, building plans, and blueprints dating as far back as the early 1940s and created a Excel database in order to keep track of record location. This summer allowed me to see government directly interacting with people.

I also attended two seminars, "Exploring Liberty" at Bryn Mawr College sponsored by the Institute for Humane Studies, and "Rebels With A Cause" at Clemson University, sponsored by the Foundation for Economic Education. "Exploring Liberty" allowed me to attend lectures on philosophy, law, economics, literature, and politics and engage both fellow students and professors in discussions about issues ranging from central banking to the philosophy of John Locke to drug policy and more. "Rebels With A Cause" allowed me to attend economics lectures ranging from the history of economic thought, public-choice economics, and the Austrian School of Economics.

Class of 2014

This summer I worked under the mentorship of New Paltz Village Board Trustee Ariana Basco. My experience was diverse and engaging. I attended board and committee meetings, researched local political issues, and participated in community outreach initiatives. This experience provided me the opportunity to experience the intricacies of local government, and also served to hone my understanding of quality research methods when I was tasked with the specific job of researching municipal mergers.

In this sense, I served as an informal policy advisor on a controversy facing our community. Further, the broad nature of evaluating the candidacy of New Paltz for a municipal merger demanded a truly diverse methodological approach. Qualitative comparative analyses of village and town codes were paired with more quantitative work on budgets and tax levies. In the end I produced a paper specific to New Paltz, but with implications for small municipalities everywhere. The opportunity to work so closely with an elected official ended up being an invaluable supplement to my coursework here at New Paltz.
